

Post-doctoral Positions

Paris School of Economics (PSE) is offering Post-Doctoral positions starting Sept 1, 2023 (flexible; in particular, an earlier date is possible). These positions can be for one or two years and come with no teaching nor administrative duties so that Post-Doctoral students can devote all of their time to their research.

These post-doctoral positions are offered as part of PSE's ambition to develop research at the frontier with other disciplines. In particular, we are looking for students working on urban studies, with a strong background in a field different from economics, e.g. sociology, geography, or history, yet focusing on topics that relate to economics.

Potential applicants may want to look at the webpage dedicated to the Urban Economics, History and Society project along with the presentation of the wider initiative "opening economics" developed at PSE.

Successful applicants will be expected to interact and work with economists at PSE, and must therefore have shown their ability to engage in a fruitful dialogue with economists.

They will be provided with office space and computer facilities as well as a research budget. Salary, competitive in Europe, will depend on experience. The PhD should be completed or duly planned by the date of the appointment. Applicants with a Ph.D. obtained prior to 2019 will not be considered. Knowledge of French is NOT required.

Prospecting candidates are invited to send their application package to Camille Hémet (camille.hemet@psemail.eu), indicating "Post-doc OSE: Urban" in the subject line.

The application package should include a sample of the applicant's research (e.g. a job market paper, or any relevant working paper) along with a CV and a motivation letter including references we may contact.

Any query or further details about applications should also be sent to Camille Hémet.

Candidates may be invited to give a job talk at PSE.

Applications will be treated as they arrive.
